The Balloon.

ritten on the ascension of the first Balloon New York City at Vauxhall Gardens, Bowe near Sixth street. Mons. Guilles, Aeronaut, Hurrah! Hurrah! Gless, clear the way t Run! The Balloon goes up to-day! Run! The Balloon goes up to-day! gee old and young, black, white and all, Fill every passage to Vanuhal!— Vauxhal! the goal, the flooded above, Where streams from every quarter pour. See the inimitable throng, That in the Rowery crowd along: See dandy coats and bonnets gay Shewia, ribbers, stream along Brosdway. See carts and coaches dashing on: See mea, and boys, and wumen, run. They come, they come, from every side, Idke bubbles on a rushing tele: They drive with half Nisgara's force, Nor ever fleefer was his course.

is is reverge, or hate, or fear, or wonder, urges their career? It must be Wotder's trumpet loud— Neught else could draw so vast a criwd, but soon the driving storm is passed; They all have reached the goal at last.

LEOLA;

THE MYSTERIOUS RANGER.

A Tale of the Mexican War.

By 2. Hambton Vapunda

Buther of " Allela," " The Miller Patriot," "Wild Bormit," " Almont," " Jessie Wharton," etc. "Speak plainly," she said, after a moment's thought, "what do you mean?" The Monk fixed his eyes upon the creature of his will, with the power of the basalisk.

"I mean," he said, with slow, hiss ng empha sis, "That Captain Travis must die to-nightthat he must be found murdered in his bed—that your hand must do the deed!" "I?" she echeed, shrinking from him, as from the presence of a demon. "I—I cannot!" "You car," said the Monk, sternly. "I will not."

"You will! You must! You shall!" cried th Monk wildly. The woman clasped her hands upon her breas', ifred her imploring eyes to his, and slid from her chair to the fleor—the picture of despair. "I will leave you now," said the Monk, rising,

"to frame your plans, and prepare your mind for e execution of one of heaven's apostates. This Travis hates us all, is plotting against us all, and why should we besitate in putting him to his purgation. Farewell, daughter, until to night, when I shall see you again."

The Senorita did not look up-did not seem to hear or heed him as he went out. She sat listlessly upon the floor, with her hands clasped above her head, her agony-stamped face pale and motionless. Presently she took her hands down, and helding the right one up before her, she gazed upon it long and earnestly.

"It is white, yet," she murmured. "Whatever, my crines may be, my hands are yet un-stained with bloed!" A shiver ran through her frame, and she held up her bands, as though to shut out some horrid sight. 'Oh, why am I in the power of this vile man? Why must I obey his every command?"

She rose to her feet with something like returning resolution. But her energies seemed to be entirely wrecked, and ere she had completed half a dozen turns in the room, she muttered : "Yet what is this young Texan to me? If his death will also remove Leola, and give me back my Eduardo, why should I besitate to strike the And thus the day passed in doubt and hesita tion, remorse and fear, and the night waned far, finding the fair frail woman weak and nervous, now frantic with remorse, then s rong in passionate energy. It was near midnight when the monk entered her spartment.

"The house is as eep," he said in a low, ominous tone. "Is my daughter ready to perform the task which I have assigned her?"

She clasped her hands convulsively to her breast, for some moments, and rested against the mantel, while she seemed to struggle with her violent emotions.

"Is this not a trap," she said, at last, "in which you intend to catch me, for the purpose of ridding yourself of me? Will I not be arrested in the morning, for committing this deed?"

"Not so," said the priest, meeting her searching gaze calmly. "His friend, and apparent servant, sleeps in the next room. In the morning, we will charge him with the deed, and I will see that he does not escape punishment! Come, daughter! rouse yourself for this thing.

Are you ready?"

She placed her hand within her bosom, and drawing forth a golden dagger, she gazed upon it for a moment, abstractedly. Then reaching out her left hand to wards a small lamp, she said, in a cold, unearthly voice:

"I am! Lead me to his room!" "Descend the stairs, and enter the third room to the right. You cannot mistake it," said the She picked up the lamp-crossed the roompaused a moment upon the threshold, and looked searchingly at the priest—then began to descend the stairs.

The Monk closed the door after her, and began to pace the room, chaning his hands with exultant

We must now go back to Mariano, who, when she had seen Kit, and received from him the sad missive from Travis to her mistress, and learned from the ranger the fate which they apprehended, had placed her trembling hand upon the door knob of Leola's room, to convey to her the sad intelligence, when she suddenly paused.

"Let me not be too hasty," she muttered. "My poor mistress would not be able to bear this sad news, and I know this wily priest's mode of working better than they. He must be watched first. It will be time enough at the last mo-ment, for the blow to fall on the poor Sefiora."

emerge from Castillias room, and ascend the stairs. With the stealthiness of the cat, she followed him, and saw him enter the spartment of Sefiorita Cos. The next one to it was occupied by Vito, and it took her but a second to gain it. Luckily, Vito was out. The third floor, like the second, was arranged with a piazza in the rear. This Mariane seen gained, and by crouching down by the window, she overheard the entire conver-sation which passed between the Monk and his agent. Her blood run cold, as she heard the di-abolical plot; but her heart was strong, and she resolved to baffle them. Quickly arranging her plans, she returned to her own room, after the Monk had left, and without saying anything to any one, passed through the duties of the day, as though nothing unusual had, or was about to Night had no sconer arrived, however, than she ascended the stairs, and concealing herself in a niche fu the wall, caused by an abrupt turning of the stairs, she patiently awaited the coming of the priest. He had no sconer entered the room and closed the door, than her ear was at the key hole. She heard what passed, and as those fatal words' "I am," were uttered in response to his nterrogatory, "Are you ready?" she darted from the spot, and passing through her own room, was thus enabled to appear at Travis' winlow, as we have seen.

Making them crouch down upon the piazza, against the wall between the two rooms, she burriedly narrated all that she had heard and seen, and with wild, palpitating hearts, and dis tended muzcles, they breathlessly awaited the Genuine article made under the name of COLUMBIAN HAIR DYE, which is sold at the very low price of FIFTY CENTS. This dye still increases in public favor daily, and for the short period which has elapsed since if was re-groduced by the present Proprietor, its asles have far outstripped anything of the kind ever introduced. Harrison, the original and celebrated Perfurner and Hair Dye Manufacturer, (from whom we derive our name, &c.,) was the FIRST person that ever manufactured a Hair Dye under the name of Columbian, (although several have since adopted the name,) yet still, for the same leanth of time, we doubt whether his sales reached half the number—his price then being $1. It is plain to every intelligent reader, who use Gree, that the majority of so-called dyes are perfectly worthless trash—and although they pretend that their article will color your hair a BROWN, you find after a trial that you either get a dirty, middy-looking BLACK, or no color at all. The reason is plain, one half manufacture to sell, not to use, and they at once flood the market, until, as a last resort, the Druggiets are forced to sell it at what it costs thom, and & times less, so that it may not remain too long on their hands. We do not mean to say that il are made in this manner, far from it, yet you will find it so in the malority of Hair Dyes and like preparations. We are well persuaded, not only from our own experience, but from many who have used it with perfect success, these Berricks of the preparation in the market. There is nothing in it that will injure the hair or akin.

To be had at the "Columbian Depot," (either whole-mile or refall, 46 South Second st., Williamsburch, and by Druggiets generally.
